CAROLINE BAUMANN
DIRECTOR

Caroline Baumann joined Cooper Hewitt, Smithsonian Design Museum in 2001 and has held many leadership positions at the museum. Now, as the fifth Director of Cooper Hewitt since its opening in 1976, she is spearheading the grand opening of the renovated and expanded museum in December 2014 – a transformation that will create immersive museum spaces and participatory visitor experiences never before seen in the museum realm. Baumann played an active role in overseeing the master plan as well as the selection of architects for the renovation project, and has been instrumental in making the entire campus accessible and inviting. She is leading the campaign to realize the most ambitious capital project in the museum’s history, which has raised more than $87 million to date toward the $91 million goal. Baumann and her team have forged multiple national and international partnerships in recent years, as they advance the museum’s mission to inspire, educate and empower people through design.

To increase accessibility during the renovation period, Baumann managed the realization of the Cooper Hewitt Design Center in Harlem, a 1,500-square-foot education space that has served 25,000 people since its opening in May 2012. She also spearheaded national and international exhibitions and other global partnerships.

Before starting at Cooper Hewitt, Baumann worked at The Museum of Modern Art where she held senior development roles and raised funds for the museum’s Yoshio Taniguchi building project, amongst others. Prior to her time at MoMA, she served as Director of Development at the Calhoun School in Manhattan.

Baumann is a member of the Citizens’ Stamp Advisory Committee for the U.S. Postal Service and the NYC Landmarks50 Advisory Committee and a director of the Royal College of Art U.S. Alumni Group Advisory Board. She is a founding member of the Collective, which stages the Collective Design Fair every May in New York. Baumann is also a member of the NYCxDesign steering committee for New York’s citywide event showcasing design.

She received a master’s degree in medieval art from New York University’s Institute of Fine Arts, and a bachelor’s degree in the history of art and French literature from Bates College in Lewiston, Maine.
